TALKING TEENS

A chatty teenager at midnight needs as much attention as a newborn wanting a midnight feed.

HOME AND SCHOOL PARTNERSHIP

Supporting teens doesn't always mean removing consequences or fixing every uncomfortable situation for them. Sometimes the most caring thing adults can do is hold students accountable while helping them learn and grow

ATTENDANCE POLICY

3 lates = Detention and a call home
Next late = Referral to the office
More than 30 mins late = Marked as absent
Unexcused absences = 2 detentions
5 absences = call home
10 absences = referral to the office

NOVEMBER BLUES

Supporting Teenagers Through November
November can feel long. The excitement of September has worn off, academic demands are increasing, and students can become tired or overwhelmed. Encourage routines, sleep, physical activity, and checking in with teenagers without making every conversation about marks.

HOME AND SCHOOL PARTNERSHIP IS CRITICAL TO YOUR CHILD'S SUCCESS, PLEASE CONTACT THEIR SUPPORT TEAM IF YOU HAVE ANY CONCERNS

A NOTE FROM THE PRINCIPAL-GROWING UP IS MESSY!

If there is one thing I have learned over the years, both as an educator and as a parent, it's that raising teenagers is not for the faint of heart! One minute they amaze us with their maturity, kindness, and independence, and the next minute we find ourselves wondering what on earth they were thinking. Haha!

But here's the thing. Teenagers are supposed to make mistakes. They are still learning how to navigate friendships, manage emotions, make decisions, and figure out who they are. And sometimes, those lessons come with uncomfortable conversations, disappointment, and yes, even consequences.

As the adults in their lives, our instinct is often to jump in and fix things, especially when we see them upset. But sometimes the greatest gift we can give our teenagers is the opportunity to work through something difficult, take responsibility, and discover that they are capable of making things right.

PROGRESS NOT PERFECTION

At Leo Hayes, we don't expect perfection. We expect growth. We want our students to know that one poor decision does not define who they are, but how they respond to that decision matters.

And that's where our partnership with families is so important. When home and school work together, even when we don't always agree, we send a powerful message to our teenagers: We care about you enough to support you, challenge you, and hold you accountable.

After all, our goal isn't to raise teenagers who never make mistakes. It's to help them become adults who know what to do when they do.
And if we can all survive the teenage years with our sense of humour intact, I'd call that a win too! 😊
